Our citizens have been considerably disturbed during the past week in consequence of the appearance of small pox in town; or at least a supposed case of small pox, as some doubt its genuineness. The following are the facts as far as we could learn:—On Monday, the 30th, a man named Boutwell, whose wife was visiting a sister at this place, came from Cincinnati, where he had been on business for several weeks, and at the time of his arrival was very feeble and scarcely able to walk. He said that he had been seriously injured by a trunk falling on him, and took to his bed soon after his arrival on Monday morning. Dr. Stephen Hunt was called, who visited the patient several times during Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, and on the last day named pronounced the case small pox in a light form, but that he was suffering more from a conplication of other diseases. When it was known that the man had smallpox he was generally deserted, and even his wife was persuaded to leave the house, and it is said by persons who heard him, that his cries for water were pitiful indeed, as he was harming with the said the standard of the case. Monday, the 30th. a man named Bout-

A BASHFUL MAN.

My father was a farmer of no small property, with no other learning than what he had acquired at a charity school, but my mother being dead, and I an o ly child, he determined to give me that advantage which he fancied would have made him happy—a learned education. I was therefore sent to a grammar school at Ghence to Cambridge, with a view of qualifying me for holy orders. Here, having but a small allowance from my father and being naturally of a timid and bashful disposition, I had no opportunity of rubbing off that native awkwardness which was destined to cause me so much misery.

In my person I am tall and thin, with a fair complexion and light flaxen hair, but of such extreme susceptibility shame that on the slightest subject of confusion, my blood all rushes into my cheeks and I appear a perfect "full

He had two sons and five daughters, all grown upand living with their mother ad a maiden sister of Sir Thomas, at Burton Hall, dependent on the father.

Conscious of my unpolished gait, I had been for some time past taking private lessons from a Professor who teaches "grown gentlemen to dance;" and, although I at first found wondrous difficulty in the art he taught, my knowledge of mathematics was prodigious use in teaching me the equilibrium of my body, and the due adjustment of the center of gravity to the five positions. Having now acquired the art of walk ing without tottering, and learned to make a bow, I boldly ventured to accept the Baronet's kind invitation to a family dinner, not doubting that my new acquirements would enable me to see the ladies with tolerable intrepid-

As I approached the house, the dinner bell alarmed my fears lest I had spoiled the dinner by the want of punctuality. Impressed with this idea, I blushed the deepest crimson, as my name was repeatedly announced by the servants who ushered me into the library, searcely knowing woat or who At my enterance I summoned fortitude, and made my new learned bow to Lady Burton, but unfortunately bringing back my left foot to the third position I trod upon the gouty toe of poor Sir Thomas, who had followed closely at my heels to be the nomenclator of the family. The libary in which we were seated being righly furnished with books in elegant bindings, I conceived that Sir Thomas was a man devoted to literature, and ventured to give my opinion recpecting the several editions of the Greek classics, in which Sir Thomas' ideas entirely concided with my own. While talking on the subject my attenion was directed to an edition of X enophon, in sixteen volumes, which, as I had never heard of such a thing, greatly excited my curiousity, and I rose up to see what it could be. The barnonet saw what I was about, and, as I supposed, willing to save me trouble, rose to take down the volumes, which made me more eager to prevent him, and hastily laying my hand on the first volume, I pulled it forcibly; but lo! instead of books a board, which the book-binder's art had been made to look like sixteen volumes, came tumbling down, and unluckily pitched upon an ink-stand on the table under it. In vain did Sir Thomas assure me there was no harm; I saw the ink streaming from a beautiful inlaid table on the splendid Turkey carpet, and, scarce knowing what I did, attempted to stop its progress with my white pocket-hankerchief. In the height of this confusion we were informed that dinner was served up; and I, with joy then understood that the bell which at first had so alarmed my fears was only the half-hour dinner-bell. In walking through the hall and suite of apartments to the dining room, I had time partially to collect my scattered senses and desired to take my seat between Lady Burton and her eldest daughter at the table. Since the tall of the wooden Xenophon, my face had been continurally burning like a fire-brand; and I was just beginning to recover myself, and to feel comfortably cool, when an unlooked-for accident rekindled all my heat and blushes.

Having set my plate of soup too near the edge of the table, in bowing to Miss Dipah, who politely complimented me on the pattern of my waist-coat. I discharged the whole scalding contents into my lap. ### New Hints for Table Etiquette. Nye's Boomerang.

There are a great many people who behave well otherwise, but at the ta-ble they do things that if not absolutely outre and ensemble, are at least pianissimo and sine die.

It is with a view to elevating the popular taste and etherializing, so to speak, the manners and customs of ur readers, that we give below a few hints upon table etiquette.

On seating yourself at the table draw off your gloves and put them in your lap under your napkin. If you have just cleaned your gloves with benzine, you might leave them in the front yard.

When you are at a dinner do not take up a raw oyster on your fork and playfully ask your host if it is dead. marks about death at dinner are in very poor taste. Pears should be held by the stems and peeled gently but firmly, not as though you were skinning a dead horse. It is not bon ton.

Oranges are held on a fork while being peeled, and the facetious style of squirting the juice into the eyes of your hostess is now au revoir.

Stones in cherries or other fruit should not be placed upon the tablecloth, but slid quietly and unostenta. tiously into the pocket of your neighbor or noiselessly tossed under the

If you strike a worm in your fruit do not call attention to it by mashing it in the nut cracker. This is not only uncouth, but is regarded in the best society as blase and exceedingly vice versa. Macaroni should be cut into shor pieces and eaten with an even gracefu motion, not absorbed by the yard.

In drinking wine, when you get to the bottom of your glass do not throw your bead back and draw in your breath like the exhaust of a bath-tub in order to get the last drop, as it engenders a feeling of the most depressing melancholy among the guests.

After eating a considerable amount do not arise and unbuckle your vest strap in order to get more room, as it exceedingly au fait and dishabille.

If by mistake you drink out of your finger bowl, laugh heartily and make some facetious remark which will change the course of conversation and renew the friendly feeling among the members of the party.

Cultivating the Black Walnut.

A paper read before the Indiana State Board of Agriculture by W. H. Ragan, secretary Indiana Horticultural Society.

THE BLACK WALNUT (Juglans Nigra.) On page 450 Report of the Department of Agriculture for 1870, occurs the following Statement: "In January, 1866, there was brought to New York from the West a walnut tree, seventy feet long, containing 4,600 feet, board neasure, which when cut into veneers, hirty to the inch, would be equal to 38,000 feet, worth at 20 cents per foot, 27.000. The estimated cost of cutting arting and storing for sale was $700. And again, though I cannot give the auhor of this item: "A man in Wisconsin | Cultivate as you would a corn crop by planted a piece of land with black walnut, 23 years ago. The land flooded spring and summer and was unfit for ordinary cultivation. The trees are now from 16 to 18 inches in diameter and have been sold for $27,000." we are all aware, these are exceptional cases, but that walnut lumber now commands from $75 to $100 per thousand feet in this city, and that too, located as it is right in the midst of former groves of which any country might have been proud, is a fact beyond con-troversy. But this noble forest is gone, The period at which cultivation may and we, whose immediate ancestors, a be discontinued cannot be definitely stalwart band of pioneers, toiled long and faithfully to remove the almost character of the seasons and quality of worthless cumberers of the ground, are the soil. THE MOST WORTHY VARIETY for artificial groves and timber belts. Although addressing myself to men, residents of a once densely forest-covered region, whose business for a half century has been the destruction of our noble forests, I shall reiterate the warning, "Woodman spare that tree," and with it urge upon you the propriety of devoting a few spare acres to the cultivation of a walnut grove. I know it has been sneeringly said by our prairie neighbors in the West, that they could raise corn and have it manfactured into whiskey and glucose, for which they could barter us Hoosiers out our timber, cheaper than Howcould raise it. ever true this may have been in the past, I am satisfied that it cannot long be practiced, unless we defeat "prohibition," or plant groves at an day, since we are so rapidly learning the true value of our timber. Before presenting my subject in detail, I will briefly allude to the fact that horticulturists, rather than agriculturists, have been first to advocate the claims of arti ficial forestry. This is but natural since their occupation leads them directly to this result, the propagation and care of young trees being to them a source of revenue, and in view of the fact that their tender and precious crops are more susceptible of unfavorable influences by climatic changes incident to the removal, or partial absence of forests and groves. But after all, the farmer has the greater real interest in this subject. In the first place he has the broad acres on which to grow timper; he, too, is greatly interested in the preservation of moisture and the ame-lioration of climate incident to the culture of timber; his herds and flocks receive comforting shelter both winter and sumer from his groves, while fuel and timber for his own comfort and profit result therefrom. Having thus briefly argued a few of the points of interest to the agricultrist, in the subject Miss Thursby left Scandinavia for Miss Thursby left Scandinavia for the second of the second

THE BLACK WALNUT, which in my judgement, give it preeminence over all other varieties. point of quality, as relates to the actual value of the timber, I could not add to the testimonials at the head of this paper. It is doubtful whether any tree of any variety has ever proven of more value than the one cited, and the quality of the timber is such that no fickle whim of fasoion can seriously depreciate its value. It is true, black walnut is celebrated on account of its durability when brought, in contact with frequent changes from a condition of dryness to moisture, and hence is not so valuable for posts and cross ties as many other species, but for other purposes, from the finest parlor decorations to the external finish of the roughest out-buildings, it stands without a peer.

It is indigenous to our soil and perectly hardy, not requiring acclimation; it is comparatively free from the attacks of depredating insects; it grows rapidly into a tree of noble proportions. In the economy of its nature, it gathers from the elements, and naturally deesits through its decaying foliage, bark, etc., a fund of wealth to the soil. that has, in Hoosier parlance, conferred on it the title of "witness tree," it being regarded as a "witness" to good soil. It bears at an early age, and annually thereafter, full crops of nuts, that even now, possess a commercial value, equalling if not excelling the average value of a grain crop, and in this particular, if in no other, yielding a yearly income far above that of most if not all other trees that have been recommended for artificial forestry.

Furrow it off each way as you would for corn, except that the rows should be about seven feet apart. Take the nuts fresh from the trees, it is not necessary that they should be hulled, placing two nuts in each crossing. This is to insure getting a good stand. The nuts should be covered very shallow, just enough earth to hide them. In the spring the land should be furrowed off midway between the rows of nuts, and the spaces planted with corn or potatoes eross plowing, being careful to give the young trees a fair chance and good clean culture. The second spring toin out your plants to one tree to the hill. If there are spaces entirely missing, they may be filled by transplanting from the hills containing duplicates. The Parisian.
Figaro tells a queer story about Miss Emma Thursby. At Stockholm, one night after a concert, as she was waiting for a carriage in the rain, a footman in elegant livery came up and said that his master had ordered him to place his carriage at her disposal. "Who is your master?" "I have orders not to reveal his name, but to insist upon your making use of his carriage." In short, Miss Thursby, with one of the persons who accompanied her, entered the carriage and was driven to her hotel. During her visit to Stockholm, and in every town in Sweden and Norway where she went Miss Thursby found the carriage with the two white horses and the two servants at the door whenever she needed in hand, and assuring you they begin in anticipation of a period of absolute necessity, if we would provide against a timber famine in the near future, I will proceed to lay before you a few of the many argument in favor of

Improvement in Human Health.

r. G. M. Granville in Spectator.
In the result of a somewhat large acquaintance with the facts held to indiate the state and progress of "human health," I fear my testimony must be given to show that the improvement effected by science consists in a prolongation of the passive endurance of life, rather than an extension of the period of true vitality, or any increase of the opportunity for good work and real intellectual enjoyment. We may ive" longer, but our lives are not either happier or more useful for the excessive energy recently devoted to the conservativition of health, or the inordinate and laborious means taken to avoid disease and death. It may, doubtless, be possible to raise humanity to the level of one of those scientific toys which approximate perpetual motion, but expend their whole force. in moving themselves. Whetherlongevity purchased at the price of passing a lifetime in running away from death would be worth having, I must leave to be determined by the judgment of those who set a value on our so-called sanitary progress, which

I, for one, fail to recognize. I think men were happier and better and lived nobler lives, before the pursuit of health and the yearnings of longevity became a craze, almost amounting to madness. What to eat, drink, and avoid, what to wear and how to live, by what means to avoid infection, to keep off disease, and to escape from death for a few weary and worried years, are questions which so engross the thoughts, if they do not embitter the lives, of the multitude, that the proposition, "Is a sanitary life worth living?" has become to be a subect of serious contemplation, and one which the taxed and harrassed community will sooner or later be com-

Unmistakable evidence has been discovered that David Smith, who was recently murdered by his own family in Wayne county, was slaughtered in his own house, and it is believed that the whole adult portion of the family participated in the murder.

Last July George Sands, a farmer living near Milan, gave his wife $300 for safe keeping. She hid it in a straw bedtick and forgot all about it. The bed was emptied in the orchard to be renewed the other day, and the nogs wallowed in the broken straw. Fortunately all the money except $70 was found in a mutilated, but useful condition.

A DIPLOMATIC SCANDAL.

The Precious Pair Sent Here 'to Represent Russia.

A little over a year ago, when the new Russian Minister and wife arrived at Washington, Mr. Bartholemei was admired for his magnificent proportions and dark, handsome face, His English wife did not make so agreeable an impression, as from the first she was voted "queer." She is a fat, redfaced woman, with sore eyes and red hair. It was not, however, personal appearance so much as her obstrusive and innate vulgarities which gave rise to the gossip, which was at first only whispered, but which has been openly discussed since the return of the family to this city, after a sojourn at Newpor during the summer. While house-hunting a year ago there was much talk about the Minister and his wife trying to beat down agents in regard to rent, and no one appeared anxious to have them as tenan's. For many weeks after they rented a house on Connecticut avenue they lived there without furniture or servants.

Visitors were never admitted to the domain, and the servants whom they hired always left in a few days, and carried away some of the awful secrets of the quite mysterious household. Not until last March, when the Czar was assassinated and funeral ceremonies were performed in the mansion, had outsiders an opportunity to see the inside of the house. The answer was always given to callers that Madame was ill, or not at home.

One diplomatic dinner was given by the Minister and his wife, and soon afterwards fashionable society was convulsed with laughter and disgusted at the details of that dinner leaked out. It is reported that the guests arrived and were shown into the dining room where a table was set, but no dishes were seen. After all were seated Mad-ame came in from the kitchen, her naturally red face considerably inwill carnadined by her exertions, and brought in a toureen of soup, which she ladled out and recommended to her guests in the following manner: "You must eat this soup. Since that awful dinner the history of the Bartholomeis has been no secret. The diplomatic circle felt scandalized, and the diplomacy of Secretary of State Blaine was taxed to the utmost how to obtain an indefinite leave of absence for Russia's representative. recalled the invitations. About the first of December Mr. Bartholomei sold out his nousehold effects in this city, and the family said that they were to leave Washington immediately. If I paid all the assessments myself I thought it would be no more than square to get all the dividends. But this morning I got news from Leadville that has changed my notion a little about the divorce."

"He made several flowery breaks like that, and the popular feeling seem ed more or less turned against him. Several weeks ago he stole a pair of big | mules from a man who belonged to Kokomo, and the next night went back to get a neckyoke and monkeywrench that belonged to the wagon, and happened to run right into a passle of vigilants lookin' for a job. took Obadiah over to a tall, limber tree, and let him stand on a bronco pony plug under the lowest limb while they tied a clothesline around his wind

"Obadiah told them that he wasn't much of a bareback rider, and he didn't know whether he could do the trick or not. They slid the clothes line over the limb and hit the bronco a lick with

The bronco was a high-life plug, and had been raised in luxury, got mad when they hit him and he lit out some. That left Obidiah in a good deal of suspense. He wiggled around a little and got embarrassed, and didn' seem to know what to do with his hands for a while. Then he became more calm and composed in his maner, and the crowd made a present of him to the coroner. I wrote to the authorities to send me his cheek book and a statement of Obadiah's bank account, and whatever you're out on this divorce hooraw will be all right I had rather let the mighty and the vigilantes fix up my law business than to die of old age waiting for chancery anyhow. Suppose you had £29,000 on a herse, couldn't you afford to give £100 or even £500 to protect yourself, especially if you thought it might be an object to the jockey to lose it if you didn't do so? I did my betting entirely with the bookmakers. Over there the bookmakes are very rich. They are the hawks and the public are the chick-ens. They don't like me because I was not a chicken. Dear Sir-Enclosed please find a copy of a communication bearing date of Jan. Times, for publication, in reference to an item that appeared in its issue of the 26th of January about my taking his paper. Instead of publishing it, I received a letter asking to make reconcilask you to print it, and in connection with it the item that called forth this communication. Yours truly.

The following is Mr. Perry's letter to the Times:

A friend solicited me to take it. The consideration on which I agreed to take it no doubt you know; if not I will tell you that political considerations had nothing whatever to do in the case, as in Greencastle about the two papers. The reasons why I did as I did, if you do not know, it is unnecessary to make them public. You are an older man than I am. but you cannot boast of any ways up to the present sworn—politically—by it, through thick and thin, and I think never ignorantly, and always with a clear conscience. face to face with his doom, last Saturday, when Judge Cox over-ruled his counsel's motion for a new trial, and pronounced sentence upon the assassin as follows: You have been convicted of a crime so terrible in its circumstances and so farreaching in its results, that it has drawn upon you the horror of the whole world and the execrations of your countrymen. The excitement produced by such an offense made it no easy task to secure for you a fair and impartial trial, but you have had the power of the United States treasury and of the government in your service' to protect your person from violence and to procure vidence from all parts of the country.

You have had as fair and impartial a jury as ever assembled in a court of justice. have been defended by counsel with a zeal and devotion that merit the highest ecomium, and I certainly have done my best to secure a tair presentation of your defense. Notwithstanding all this, you have been would have been a comfort found guitt to many pople, if the verdict of the jury ned the fact that your act had estabile that of an irresponsible man. It would Arthur Thomas, took his place at the have left the satisfying belief that the crime of political assassination was something entirely toreign to the institutions and civilization of our country. But the result has denied them that comfort. The country will accept it as a fact, that that crime can be committed and the court will have to deal with it with the highest penalty known to the criminal code, to serve as an example to others. Your career has been so extraordinary that the people might well, at times, have doubted your sanity, but one cannot but believe that when the crime wa committed you thoroughly understood the nature of the crime and its consequences. (Guiteau-"I was acting as God's man,") and that you had a moral sense and conscience enough to recognize [the moral iniquity of such an act. (Prisoner-"That's a matter of THE plan of civil service reform opinion.") Your own testimony shows that you recoiled with horor from the idea. You say that you prayed against it. You say that you thought it might be prevented. This shows that your conscience warned up against the protest of your own conscience. What motive could have induced you to commit this act must be a matter of conjecture. Probably men will think that ome fanaticsm or morbid desire for selfexaltation was the inspiration for the act Your own testimony seems to controvert the theories of your counsel, who have maintained and thought lonestly, I believe that you deliberately resolved to do it, and and that a deliberate and misguided will ink. was the sole impulse. The question of consolidating he two cities of New York and Brooklyn it rapidly coming to the front. Brook-lyn has finished her autonmy, has completed her system of parks and aqueducts, and will in about a year have permanent bridge connection with the city of New York. The selfish interests of house owners in New York is opposed to this change, be-lieving it will be followed by the erection of a series of bridges to Brooklyn, and a consequent decline of metropolitan real estate. There is no ground for this, as the superior social advan-tages of New York Island will always make it preferable to Brooklyn or any surrounding city. The natural premium on a house in New York is fully 0 per cent. Good houses are rented n Brooklyn for $1,000 and less, and such a thing is almost unknown in New York, where it is commonly said that every body pays from one-third to one half of their income for mere rent. The extravagant cost of living in the city threatens to become an injury to it, and it is, therefore, to the interest of the general mercantile population here to see the facilities increase of connection with the neighboring shores. Scoville continued-If your Honor additional time should be given for this motion. I also have assurance from a prominent member of this bar that he will assist me next week.

Scoville then desired to make a new motion relative to additional grounds that he had discovered for asking a new trial. These grounds, he stated, with the jury by outside parties, and, second, subsequent admissions of an expert that he thought Guiteau was insane, but did not dare to say so for and in the public estimation. Scoville read the affidavit sworn and subscibed to by himself setting forth in detail the grounds stated, and added; "I have not yet prepared a formal metion it will be sufficient if I do so any time during the day."

Anacdotes of Wabster.

I accompanied Mr. Webster to Annapolis to inform him of the facts of the case he was about to argue. But these were by no means the main topics of our conversation. It was not until the day before the hearing that he seemed to address himself seriously to the work of preparation. He then shut himself up in his room for the entire morning, coming occasionally into mine to ask about some question of fact, bringing half-sheets of common blue letter paper, on which, he would say, he had been making "scratches." They were distinct propositions, text rather, than arguments, carefully studed, and, as was apparent from erasures and interlining, labored with a view to condensation, or to satisfy a fastidous judgement. Once, when I expressed a doubt whether one of his propositions was in accordanne with certain facts, Mr Webster drewhis pen through it, saying, "So, then, that cock won't fight." The notes thus prepared were the brief of his argument, and he spoke from them. That the glimpses thus afforded of the workings of a great intel lect, were extremely interesting may readily be imagined.

But if the case did not engross us a all times, conversation did not Our pleasantest talks were after dinner, when we came back from the bar mess-room. Mr. Webster would then put on his slippers and tilt back his chair, with his feet against the side of the mantel piece, on a level with his head, saying. "Shall I not take mine ease in mine inn?" and go off into a stream of anecdotes, quotations, incidents of his early life and matters and things generally. On these occasions Shakspear was a favorite topic, and his familiarity with it was testified by the aptness and frequency of his quotations.

In one of these protracted talks, which always ran late into the night Mr. Webster detailed the circumstances of his refusal to accept the clerkship of a County Court, as they are related in Curtis, when the salary would have been a little fortune, and amused himself with a humorous comparison ween his subsequent career and what would then have been his destiny.

On the same occasion he described his early practice in New Hamrshire, and told with almost boyish glee of of overtaking, one bright moonlight night, a timber sled at the foot of a hill ill on which the snow lay deep. The driver had gone to a tavern ahead an extra horse, and Mr. Webster, hitching his own horse as an addition to where the teamster presently found it. "I had hidden behind a tree," said the narrator, "where I enjoyed the fun, and only came forth to stay the hand of the owner of the sled, who was 'larruping' his horses, because the 'tarnal critters' had put him to the expense of hiring assistance, when they were able to do the work themselves, and only refused their load to spite him." was Mr. Webster's way of telling the story, and his imitation of the driver's one and manner, that enhanced the drollery of the incident.

Upon another occasion he gave an amusing account of his escape through the ack window of an old-fashioned stage coach when the horses were runamazement of the driver, after they were stopped, when he found a Mem-ber of Congress standing on the baggage rack, and playing footman to a stage driver.

The interest of these anecdotes was not so much in their matter as in the evidence they afford that neither the wear and tear of political and professional life nor distinguished position had impaired the freshness of early

Another of Mr. Webster's anecdotes Theophilus Parsons to give no law advice on Sunday-a rule which he persisted in adhering to when a citizen came to Salem on that day from Boston to obtain an opinion on a matter of first importance in connection with business to be transacted early Mon-day. Angry at having had his journey for nothing, the client was on his way to his carriage when Mr. Parsons fol-lowed him and asked whether he had made up his mind as to what was right according to the golden rule, and being answered in the affirmative, told him to go back to Boston, do what he believed was "just right," and when Mr. Parsons got to his office later on Monday, he had no doubt he would find

Speaking, on another occasion, about the elements of success in professional life, Mr. Webster said: "Why, there is laborious man, and in all the relation of life absolutely unexceptionable, and yet, confound the fellow! he never called out: produces results.'

The age of some one being mentioned one evening, Mr. Webster said: "The worst standard by which to measure a man's life is the parish clerk's register. Some men, sir, are born old; others, again, never grow old; and certainly, when I listened to his flow of animated talk, the gleefulness of many of his remarks about men and things, I fully appreciated his meaning-that it was the temperament of the man, and not the number of his years, that made him old or young.

The Editor and the Shoemaker.

Carson (Nev.) Appeal

One day an editor, hard at work trying to devise a plan to make delinquent subscribers pay their dues, was called upon by a shoemaker, who dropped in to give the editor some valuable hints on running a newspaper. The editor, overjoyed at the opportunity, gave the man his best cane-bottom chair, handed him a resh cigar and listened attentively. Quoth the shoemaker as he lit the weed: "Your paper needs a hundred improved features. You don't grasp the topics of the day by the right handle; you don't set the locals in the right kind of type; your telegraph news is too thin; even the paper itself is poorly manufactured, not thick no mean order, and for her courage in enough and too chalky a white. You the field, where she takes her place by 000 acres of New Mexico land, and the don't run enough matter, and what her father's side and gallops fearlessly you do run ain't of the right sort. Your deas about protective tariff internally foolish and your stand on the Conkling matter was bad, bad. I tell you as a who have pursued the flying host unfriend I dont take your paper myself, company, and a fence is being built but I see it once in a while, and, as a around it, preparatory to the raising of paper is a public affair, I suppose I have as good a right to criticise as any body. If a man want's to give me advice I let him; I am glad to have him,

"That's exactly it," said the editor, kindly; "I always had a dim idea of my shortcomings, but never had them so clearly and connincingly set forth as by you. It is impossible to express my gratitude for the trouble you have taken not only to flud out these facts, but to point them out also. Some peo-ple knowing all these things, perhaps nearly as well as you, are mean enough to keep them to themselves. You suggestions come in'a most appropriate time; I have wanted somebody to lean on, as it were, for some weeks. Keer your eye on the paper, and when you see a weak spot, come up." The shoemaker left, happy to know that his suggestions had been received with a Christian spirit. Next day, just as he was finishing a boot, the editor came in, and, picking up the mate remarked:

"I want to tell how that boot strikes me. In the first place the leather is poor; the stitches in the sole are too wide apart and in the uppers too near the edge. Those uppers will go to pieces in two weeks. It's all wrong, my friend putting poor leather in the heels and smoothing it over with grease and lamp-black. Everybody complains of your boots; they don't last; the legs are too short, the toes are too narrow, and the instep too high. How can you have the gall to charge twelve dollors for such boots beats me. Now I tell you this as a friend, because I like o see you succeed. Of course, I don't know any more about shoemaking than you do about a newspaper, but still I take an interest in you because you are so well-disposed to me. In fact-

Here the exasperated cobbler grabbed a lapstone, and the editor gained the street, followed by old knives, pincers. hammers, and awls, sent after him by the wrathful cobbler, who, on regaining his seat, swore by the nine gods that no imperiment, lopear idiot that no imperiment, lopear idiot should ever come round trying to teach him his trade.

Mated, Not Married.

Nashville (Tenn.) Banner.

A very interesting and romantic affair occurred not a thousand years ago and not a thousand miles from the town of Shelbyville, in Bedford county. The facts were related to a Banner reporter not long since, and as he knows they are facts be prints them. The names of the parties are also known, but they will be omitted here, because the facts will be recognized by those who are familiar with the circumstances. A young gentleman and lady were engaged to marry, but found an almost insurmountable object in the path to the consummation of that happy event in the persons of her irate and stern father and obstinate and unsympathizing mother. She tried in vain to soften the obdurate parents. She endeavored to frighten them into giving their consent by threatening self destruction, and after finding that would be of no avail, she announced her determinaion to elope with the man of her choice. A close watch was kept over her for some time, and she became matter, and silent about the parents thought she had concluded to take their advice and forget the object of her affections. Soon after, however, 'when the leaves began to turn," she with her parent's consent, went to visit a friend in an adjoining county, and upon arriving there notified her affianced. He came promptly, with the necessary legal purchased in Bedford county, and they were married. Sev-eral months of happiness passed by and not a shadow fell across their pathway to mar the scene of bliss which they then believed would be eternal. But suddenly a thunderbolt fell in the household, which turned joy into sorrow, and sunshine into darkness. They were informed that they were not married at all, only mated, as the marriage was illegal and void, it having occurred I have often repeated to students in my law office. It was the inflexible rule of another. The distressed and terrified young lady was still more terrified when she was informed that her father and mother, having heard the facts, were both en route to her once happy home to tear her away from the man she had so long called husband, but who really had no title to that name. Everything ended happily, however, as another license was procured and they were united before her parents arrived. The affair created quite a sensa-tion and for a time was the talk of the whole country. It served as a warning to other young people matrimonially inclined, however, and a mishap of that nature has not occurred since.

Bound to Have Satisfaction.

She appears to be distinguished above all her rivals, not only for loveliness, but for her accomplishments likewise, being a poetess of on her Arab courser, as theet and powerful as his own. The picture is worthy der Bou Amena's command-the chief with his white bournous flying behind him and the red and purple ta sels of his horse gear dancing in the wind, while the dark blue and white striped veil of the girl, with its gold border, flashes in the sun as it floats out behind the long streaming tail of her flying steed While other merchants are worrying to sell off their old out season goods,

Editor of the Times:- The statements recently published in your valuable paper has created much excitement in this city among the class who own and use horses, and after reading your request that all should write you who had been benefitted by the letter published from Dr. Bates in regard to the remarkable success he always had with Kendall's Sparin Cure, I decided to write you my experience with it. My first knowledge of this remedy came through a visit to the office of the Massachusetts Society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. This society was the first to use Kandail's Sparin Cure in Bostou, and I was informed by Charles A. Currier, a gentlemen in Charles A. Currier, a gentleman in whom I had the utmost confidence that they had never used anything that worked so well for spavins or any lameness in horses, and he stated that he gave it to poor men who had lame horses and would agree to use it, and in this way he was enabled to get along without prosecuting them as it was sure to cure when persevered with. Some time after this I recieved a very severe injury to the knee joint and the high recom-mendation which Mr. Currier gave Kendall's Spavin Cure, gave me so much confidence in it that I used it for my knee highest number at any one time reaching that had not occurred in his history for twenty-five years. "A glorious record," added the Docter, "and I have been saying that time my faith has been so strong in the merits of this remeily that we will not be without it in the house.
